"In my current season I have been exploring surface, illumination and scale," says artist Angela Nesbit. "I love working with large volumes of paint, which has pushed me to work on larger and larger canvases. I have created varied and exciting surfaces. I continue to find ways to create as much chaos on the canvas as possible. Then I play the game of carving out my subject and working to make sense of it all. I feel my recent work holds the viewer's attention a bit longer. At first glance you may simply enjoy the painting but as you get closer you begin to find interesting patterns, chaotic underpaintings peeking through or maybe a little bit of lace in a rose. All entertaining the viewer a little longer."

Andrew Braitman, a noted Charlotte art figure, recently explained, "Angela has tenaciously carved out a niche that is all hers. I have never seen an artist manage the sheer volume of paint and maintain the beautiful, varied, informed and informing surface that Angela has achieved. Luminosity is her goal. Angela has achieved a narcotic surface that mesmerizes the eye and entertains our intellect. While referencing her subject, she manages to create her own emanating light and obscure the very objects she paints so subtly that we are unaware of our own participation in her enthralling creations."

Nesbit's work will be exhibited at Shain Gallery in Charlotte, North Carolina, on November 15.
